"Wedding March" from A Midsummer Night's Dream Incidental Music . .Felix Mendelssohn (1809-1847)

According to Mendelssohn's sister Fanny, Midsummer Night's Dream had long been a favorite with the entire Mendelssohn family, especially Felix. Thus, the young prodigy was inspired at the age of seventeen to compose an overture for it. Then in 1842 he was commissioned by the King of Prussia to compose a complete set of incidental music for the play. The overture and twelve subsequent pieces that now comprise this music blend together seamlessly, despite the intervening seventeen years.

The Russian nationalist composer Ippolitov-Ivanov became fascinated with folk song while in Georgia, a resort area in the Caucasus Mountains. Here he served in his first position as music director after graduating from the St. Petersburg Conservatory. During his eleven years in this region he observed, recorded, and analyzed the color and exoticism of its semi-oriental music. A few years later in Moscow he realized the potential of these folk song ideas in his orchestral suite Caucasian Sketches. The last movement of this suite reflects the influence of Rimsky-Korsakov, Ippolitov-Ivanov's teacher.

Called a "keystone of Romantic piano writing," Weber's Konzerstück is essentially a one-movement concerto in four distinct sections. Weber himself provided this program for its interpretation: "The lady sits in her tower: she gazes sadly into the distance. Her knight has been for years in the Holy Land; will she ever see him again? What is that distant sound? What are those forms approaching? Knights and squires with the cross of the Crusades, banners waving, acclamations of the people, and there!—it is he! She sinks into his arms. Love is triumphant…"

INTERMISSION*

After the jubilant exuberance of the wedding festivities portrayed in the Prelude to Act III of Lohengrin, the renowned "Bridal Chorus" introduces the first scene, transforming the mood into one of warmth and loving tenderness. The words praising the bride and groom are sung by the attendant ladies and nobles as they escort the pair to their bridal chamber: "Courage triumphant, love and fortune, truly make you a most happy pair."

Wagner directed the first performance of his Romantic opera Tannhaüser in 1845. Like many of his operas, it is based on ancient legend and promotes the theme of unworthy man being redeemed through the love of a pure woman. The theme of the famous Pilgrims' Chorus, heard throughout the opera, is realized in full in Act III as a band of pilgrims return to their native land.

In 1937 William Walton, the noted British composer, was commissioned by the BBC to write a march to celebrate the coronation of George VI. The title derives from a line by the British Renaissance poet William Dunbar: "... in beauty bearing the Crown Imperial." Typical of Walton's style, it employs exciting, almost kaleidoscopic orchestration with a certain jauntiness even in the midst of this majestic setting.

Eminently successful as a composer, arranger, pianist, and conductor, John Williams was selected in 1980 to succeed the late Arthur Fiedler as conductor of the Boston Pops, a position Williams had until retirement in 1993. As a composer Williams has won numerous awards for the consistent high quality of his scores for films and television. He was commissioned to compose the "Olympic Fanfare and Theme" for the 1984 Olympics. The work exhibits his technical expertise and imagination as an orchestrator and exemplifies his romantic traditionalism.

For one of the greatest scenes of pageantry in all of grand opera, Verdi composed such stirring, exciting music that it has been unparalleled in its effect. To introduce the march, Verdi used six specially constructed Egyptian trumpets. The orchestra continually emphasizes the exotic, both in its themes and in its instrumentation.

The University Symphony will have a busy schedule next year. The October concert will feature Brahms' Symphony No. 2 and the Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 with computer faculty member Stephen Schaub as soloist. The strings of the orchestra will be on tour in the midwest in late October, playing sacred concerts in churches and Christian schools. In November the orchestra will be joined by University choirs for a Hymn Festival. The March opera production is Giordano's Andrea Chénier, a dramatic portrayal of the passion and intrigue of the French Revolution. The Commencement Concert will be a gala program of symphonic works featuring three faculty soloists.

Stacey Michelle Scott, a senior piano performance major from Muncie, Indiana, studies with Dr. Susan Kindall. She performed the Haydn Concerto in D Major with the Muncie Symphony as a young concerto competition winner. During high school she also won the National Federation of Music Clubs' regional competition. Stacey has pursued interim studies with Dr. Robert Palmer at Ball State University. Since coming to BJU, she has performed in master classes with Ann Schein, Eugene Pridonoff, and Andrew Cooperstock. In addition to her many engagements as a collaborative pianist, Stacey is a laureate of the 2000 SCMTA Steinway Collegiate Artist Piano Competition and was a piano solo finalist in the 2002 BJU Commencement competition. Stacey plans to pursue graduate study and performance.
